WILKINS & BROWN

"Standard of Cadillac The World."

From "The Autocar," London, England.

WHEN the CADILLAC system of combining ignition, lighting and engine starting in one electrical system was introduced two years ago, if was very properly regarded as a bold step, and it was certainly the most interesting innovation which has been made for a long time, while experience has shown it to be as successful as it was hold. Today the CADILLAC designers have made another innovation, which, personally, we regard as even a greater improvement than the very important one of two years ago.

After once experiencing the delight of two direct and noiseless drives one feets that it is difficult to outline an ideal car which does not contain this feature and we feel thirly safe in asserting that the CADIL-LAC successful reintroduction of an old idea will be followed by other makers.
